Egypt Gets More Red Jets, Fliers Russia Reported Building Up Units

By William Beecher

CAIRO, Aug. 31 (NYT).-The Soviet Union is building up the number of Russian-piloted jet-fighter squadrons in Egypt, according to well placed sources

In addition to the four squadrons of MiG-21 fighters that were delivered to Egypt early last year, the Russians have recently added two more MiG-21 squadrons and two Sukhol-Il squad-are expected within the next few weeks. Each squadron here num-hers from 12 to 18 aircraft.

In addition, the Russians are flying four MiG-23 interceptors, primarily on reconnaissance missions over the west bank of the Suez Canal, and ten Tu-16 reconnaissance planes over the American Sixth Fleet in the Mediter-

All of these aircraft, which operate from several bases stretching from Alexandria, on the coast. some 550 miles down the Nile valley to Aswan, are maintained by Russian mechanics and protected by Soviet-manned airdefense missile and artillery

At this point, most analysis stress the defensive nature of the Soviet Air Force presence, which was deployed to Egypt last year in response to deep Israell air strikes that were threatening to undermine the regime of the late President Gamal Abdel Nasser. But some analyst me troubled. They think the growing Soviet air presence here is opening op an option for Moscow to commit even larger numbers of Soviet fighters if war crupts between Egypt and Israel.

note that Soviet pur are rotated through Soviet squadrons every three to six months. thus creating a substantial pool of airmen in the Soviet Union who have learned to work effectively under desert conditions.

More Planes Than Pilots For another, they note that the number of MIG-21s and Sukhoi-7s that have been shipped to Egypt since last fall, more than 150, bring the Egyptian Air Force up to 550 combat jets, far in excess of the 330 jet-trained pilots in its ranks.

Some here believe the Russians are engaged in a conscious policy of prepositioning aircraft in the event they should want to fly in pilots to man them in a crisis. Another factor concerns the type aircraft now being flown by the Russians. The Sukhol-11 is regarded as a very capable interceptor, even faster than the MiG-21. But, like the American F-4, it is also an excellent bomber, with about twice the 200mile operating radius of the Senior analysts stress that they are not predicting that the Soviet Union is preparing for large direct involvement in any future hostilities. The newspaper, Tin Song, is Reporting on a meeting last night between Mr. Thieu and U.S. Ambassador Elisworth Bunker, the paper quoted "observers" as saying Mr. Bunker told the president the Nixon administration has no intention of cutting aid to protest the collapse of the

Titian Painting Stolen From His Native Town

PIEVE DI CADORE, Italy, Aug. 31 (AP).—Expert thieves stole a painting by Titian and 13 other precious works from the local church overnight. The theft stripped this town, the hirth-place of the painter, of its single work by him.

The value of the stolen art was put by experts at more than $1.6

The theft was discovered when priests opened Pieve's archdeaconal church early today. They found three large canvases of the Venetian School abandooed on the floor. The thieves, police said, failed to detach them from their heavy frames.

Tition's "Madonna With Saints" was taken from a lateral chapel. The painting is signed by Titlan and carries the date 1560.

SELGON Aug. 21 (WP) -The Fice-President Nguyen Cao Ky hopelessly rigged against them, the aid issue to apply pressure on Mr. Thieu. Mr. Ky urged that he and Mr. Thieu both resign and reschedule the election for January, leaving the country under the administration of a caretaker gov-ernment. Mr. Thieu has mada it abundantly clear he has no intention of doing any such thing, and plans to proceed with the election whether or not he has any opposition.

The American Embassy here has revealed nothing of Mr. Bunker's conversations with Mr. Thieu, Gen. Minh or Mr. Ky.

Tin Song also reported that high-ranking—but unnamed—generals in the South Victnamese Army have told Mr. Thieu not to resign or postpone the election.
If he did so, the newspaper said, the army would take "strong action" to prevent it.

This oblique reference to a possible coup d'état, somethins that most diplomatic sources see as out of the question at this point, was seen here as an effort by Mr. Thieu to provide some justification for moving ahead with the election as planned.

The prevailing view among diplomats in Saigon today continued to be that there is little chance the election will not be carried off just as the president

Though Mr. Ky has declared himself out of the campaign, under South Vietnamese law his name will be on the ballot anyway, and there were unconfirmed reports that Mr. Thieu is planning to distribute a limited amount of pro-Ky election mate-(Continued on Page 2, Col. 4)

Dublin Charges British Troops With Incursions

By Bernard Weinraub

DUBLIN, Aug. 31 (NYT).—Irish Premier John Lynch said today that the British Army had failed to "control movements of their troops" along the horder with Northern Ireland and that soldiers had made at least 30 "incursions" into the Irish Republic over the past two years.

Mr. Lynch added that the army's "infringement . . . could be prejudicial to the peace."

The statement by Mr. Lynch, two days after a mob of gunmen killed a young British soldier on the border, chilled Ireland's relations with Britain even further over the crisis in Ulster.

Meanwhile, another British soldier died in Northern Ireland today. The army said Gunner Clifford Loring died of wounds suffered Sunday when he was shot in the head while manning a roadblock on the outskirts of London tonight, the British Home Office announced that an independent committee headed by Sir Edmund Compton, formerly Britain's public defender. will investigate allegations of brutality by troops and police in treatment of the 240 persons interned in Ulster under the Special Powers Act. The inquiry, the Home Office said, will be held behind closed doors. Results will be published, the Associated Press reported.]

British and Northern Ireland officials had reacted angrily, to the border slaying, charg-ing that the killers of the 22-year-old soldier, Cpl. Ian Armstrong, had opened fire on Sunday ir. the tiny village of Court-bane, only five yards south of a stream that marks the border. Army officials said that two Ferret armored cars—one of them manned by Cpl. Armstrong—had accidentally crossed the border and that Irish Republican Army terrorists had killed the soldier and seriously wounded another corporal in the amoush.

However, iffr. Lynch denied that the killers believed to be dozen, of armed men—had fired from a woodland inside the Republic. His statement, which it had been expected would be conciliatory and express regret for the soldier's death, was terse and

"During the past two years, the British Army has made some 30 incursions into the 26 counties [the Republic]" said Mr. Lynch, whose statement was issued from government offices in downtown Dublin, "These were brought to the attention of the British authorities at the time of occurrence and assurances were re-ceived that they were accidental and that stringent instructions

To Avert Fund Cutoff

Executive Privilege Invoked By Nixon on Military Aid Plan

By Michael Getler

WASHINGTON, Aug. 31 (WP). withhold information from Con--President Nixon invoked the rarely used doctrine of executive privilege today to prevent the Senate Foreign Relations Committee from finding out how much the Pentagon is planning to spend on foreign military aid over the next five years.

The President's action averted a threatened cutoff of this year's $1-billion foreign military package that would have taken effect today.

It also put the White House firmly behind Defense Secretary Melvin R. Laird in the Pentagon. chief's two-year battle with the committee chairman, Sen. J. William Fulbright, D., Ark., over the right of the executive branch to gress that legislators claim they need in their deliberations. The Defense Department supplies foreign military aid to some 46 nations. The program has taken on added importance in the last two years since under the Nixon doctrine the United States will supply increased aid to a number of countries on the theory that with stronger allies able to fight their own battles the United States will not have to use its own troops. On July 28, the Senate committee - including Republican Majority Leader Hugh Scottvoted unanimously to invoke a little known provision of the for-eign assistance act of 1961. This would have shut off all foreign military aid funds unless the Pentagon supplied the planning documents or the President invoked executive privilege and explained his reasons. Mr. Laird had said that there were no "current five-year plans" in existence and that all the Pentagon had at this point were tentative and unapproved plans submitted by military advisory groups. Sen. Fulbright contends that such a plan does exist.

In a memorandum to both Mr. Laird and Secretary of State Willism P. Rogers, the President directed that no material be provided to the committee. He echoed Mr. Laird's point, asserting that "the basic planning data and various internal staff papers requested by the committee do not. insofar as they deal with future years, reflect any approved program of this administration, for no approved program for military assistance beyond the current fiscal year exists."

He stressed that unless privacy can he maintained in exchange of these preliminary views "the successful administration of government would be muted."

The 1970 figures showed a slight moderation of the traditionally high arrest rates for Negroes as compared to whites. Whites arrest rates showed a faster rise in many categories.

In 1969 Negroes accounted for 13 percent of the population, but 55.7 percent of the arrests for violent crimes. Last year that percentage dropped to 53.3.

Negroes were the subjects of 64.8 percent of the robbery arrests and 59.9 percent of the murder arrests in 1970, but whites were in the majority in the arrests for the other major crimes.

Although the great bulk of crimes occurs in cities, tha rate of increase was higher in the suburbs and countryside. In cities of 250,000 or more population, crime rose 6 percent. In the suburbs the increase was 14 percent, and rural areas experienced a 15 percent rise. New York City had the thirdhighest major-crime rate of any U.S. community, with 5,220 crimes per 100,000 population. Miami was first, with 5,342.8, and the San Francisco-Oakland area was second with 5,329.3.

In the report's section on murder, Mr. Hoover explained that because most murders were committed by relatives or acquaintances of the victim, this crime is "a national social problem beyond police prevention."

a U.S. armored cavalry patrol. The U.S. Command said three Americans were killed, four were wounded and two armored personnel carriers and a Sheridan tank were destroyed when the enemy opened fire with machine guns and rocket-propelled grenades. Enemy losses were not known.

The U.S. Command also announced that it lifted at dawn today a special week-long alert confining 219,000 U.S. troops to operational areas and bases and restricting travel. But it gave local commanders the option of continuing the alert in their own areas if they so desired.

The alert was partly to prevent

U.S. forces from getting embroil-ed in possible South Vietnamese political unrest and partly against enemy action. There was still a threat that the North Vietnamese and Viet Cong would renew their shelling and terror attacks this week to mark two important North Vietnamese anniversaries. North Vietnam observes its na-

youths killed in traffic accidents n 1969 represented 7,400 more than would have died if their fatality rate were the same as the rate of persons aged 25 and The agency said that the sharp se in youth involvement in fatal traffic accidents during the last four years, "is probably due, primarily, to the increasing proportion of youngsters who become licensed as soon as they are old enough, and the improved financial capability of youth to own, operate, and maintain a car during periods of unprecedented general affluence.

"Changes in attitudes of youth in other areas of community life may also be at work here, such as with respect to alcoohol and drugs and, possibly changes in respect for law and order," the safety board said.

Double Hazard

Alcohol creates a "double hazard" for the young driver, the report warns "He is an inexperienced driver and an inexperienced drinker." Among the recommendations was a special alcohol safety program for young

The report also points to two other factors that could account for the high accident rate. The cars that youths drive are likely to be older and less well-maintained than those driven by their elders. Youths are more likely to drive motorcycles, which are "more inherently dangerous" than autos.

The safety board questioned the effectiveness of present driver-training programs in schools, pointing out that a recent California study shows that 27 percent of graduates of high school driver training courses failed the driving part of the licensing test on the first try.

The insurance industry for many years has been offering d premiums to drivers under 25 who have had a formal driver-education course but the companies have no way of knowiver e results in a better accident rate, the report said.

. The report also was critical of current driver licensing systems. Most of the written examinations verify only a traction of the necessary knowledge; the driving test normally omits highway epeeds, heavy traffic, nighttime driving or other difficult conditions," it said.

Detroit Gets U.S. Aid To Battle Pollution

WASHINGTON, Aug. 31 (Reuters).—The U. S. Environmental Protection Agency yesterday an-nounced two grants totaling $48.9 million for Detroit to help curb pollution in Lake Eric. EPA administrator William Ruckleshaus said that the funds followed an agreement last June between the federal government and the city to accelerate the pollution abatement program there. The agreement was reached after the EPA gave Detroit 180 days in which to halt violations of federal and state water quality standards or face possible court action.

10 School Buses Blown Up in Pontiac, Mich.

PONTIAC, Mich., Aug. 31 (AP), The Federal Bureau of Investi-gation and local police joined in a hunt today for the persons who blew up ten empty school buses and damaged two others a week before schools were to open here under a court-ordered integration plan. There were no injuries.

The city's Board of Education has been battling the integration plan, which would involve busing about 8,000 of the city's 24,000 public school pupils out of their neighborhoods in order to achieve racial balance. The board has warned of a "foreseeable disaster of race relations."

The ten destroyed buses and two damaged ones were part of a fleet of 55 vehicles in a fenced Damage was estimated at $150,000.

Police found some wiring under couple of the charred buses, leading them to speculate that at least some of the buses were linked by electrical wires, which were exploded by a detonator, thus blasting more than one bus at a time.

1972 Pontiacs Include Bumpers To Absorb Shock

DETROIT, Aug. 31 (NYT) .-The General Motors Corporation's Pontiac division announced yes-terday that there would be an energy-absorbing bumper on all its 1972 standard-sized cars, a forerunner of the bumper to come on the automobile.

General Motors executives also said that they were making optional some equipment that was to have been standard on 1972 models. The change was made because the company must sell new models at 1971 prices during the government's 90-day price

The bumper of the 1972 Pontiac is aimed at allowing a five-milean-hour collision into a parked car without any damage to the front end. The 1973 cars are by federal law to be able to absorb such a 10-mile-an-hour shock. The Pontisc bumper will be backed by two telescoping steel boxes containing urethans, a rubberized plastic. The bumper gives when hit and bounces back to its original position. In 1973 cars the system will change again and shock-absorbing cylinders likely will be used to protect front ends in minor collisions.

Adm. John H. Godfrey, 83, Uganda Lied Of British Naval Intelligence Over Colonel ain's director of Naval Intelligence during the 1939-1942 war years and later director of the Royal Indian Navy, died Sunday, his family said today.

Adm. Godfrey was largely responsible for organizing Intelligence to run in concert with Operations, a change from prewar years in which navy Intelligence ran itself as a virtually independent service.

For his personal staff. Adm. Godfrey recruited lawyers, writers, scholars and journalists, including young stockbroker Ian Fleoring, later the author of the James Bond novels.

Adm. Godfrey took much of the blame-perhaps unjustly, since he had but recently taken charge -for some of the early war intelligence errors: the failure of the Norwegian landings, underestimating the speed and power of the German battleship Bismarck and the insecurity of early convoy signals. Per-captive observers blamed these shortcomings rather on previous peacetime parsimony. When he left Intelligence, it had attained a high degree of efficiency.

He commanded the Royal In-cian Navy from 1942 to 1945 and was later criticized for his treating as a mutiny navy disturbnnces and demonstrations at the time of demobilization.

Protest Is Lodged Over Battle Death

HONG KONG, Aug. 31 (Reuters. — China has protested strongly to Uganda over the Ugandan claim that a Chinese colonel fighting with Tanzanian forces was killed in a recent horder clash, the New China News Agency reported today,

In a protest note lodged yesterday. Peking told the Ugandan government the claim was a lie and was a serious provocation against China.

Ugandan President Idi Amin had announced in Kampala last week that a Chinese colonel had been killed in a flareup of fighting along the country's border with Tanzania. He later ordered the man's body to be put on public display. In Dar es' Salaam, Tanzanian officials said the body was of a Tanzanian police officer of mixed African-German heritage, Peking's protest note sald: "The President Amin, back in Kampala after a three-day tour of northern Uganda, personally was directing Ugandan operations. He told newsmen he had assumed the job of chief of staff.

But there was no official news of the situation at the border since Mr. Amin said yesterday that a Ugandan soldier had been killed in a Tanzanian attack and a Tanzanian patrol was six miles inside Ugenda.

Chinese Generals Leave Romania; Chou Visit Seen

BUCHAREST, Aug. 31 (AP) .-A team of high-ranking Chinese generals, toasting new military cooperation, left Romonia today. Romanian informants hinted strongly that theu visit would be followed by one from Prime Minister Chou En-lai before the end of the year.

Without speaking in precise terms, Romanian sources have given the impression in the last few days during conversations with Western diplomats and newsmen that a visit by Mr. Chou to the Balkans-Romania, Yugoslavia and Albania—was being set up, probably in November.

A Hungarian newspaper, Magyar Hirlan, reported earlier this month that Mr. Chou would visit Tirana, Belgrade and Bucharest in the fall and warned of a possible "anti-Soviet axis" emerging in the Balkans.

But there has been no official confirmation of such a tour by Mr. Chou. The Yugoslav government has, however, extended an invitation for a Chinese government delegation to visit Belgrade.

A communique released in Bucharest today in connection with the military delegation's departure for Peking after ten days of talks and visits referred to "the common wish to further develop contacts and exchange

The report was published by the Office of Health Economics, an independent fact-finding hody set up hy the British drug industry. It put the cost of working time lost through minor ailments at £800 million annually. Since 1954, the report said, the number of absences through sickness has steadily risen. Time off for all kinds of illness works out at an average of 15 days a year for every worker

"The increase is not due to a rise in the severity of sickness," the document said, "out more probably to a decline in the amount of discomfort people are prepared to suffer. This is reflected in the increase in the absence for relatively minor causes of sickness, such as nervousness, headaches, sprains and strains . . . Minor ill health is now no longer ignored or tolerated."

The report said bronchitis was the biggest single cause of absence, accounting for 11.3 percent of days lost; head-aches, depression and other "personality disorders," 9.2 percent; stomach upsets or "digestive disorders," .6.6 percent, and flu, nearly 5 percent.

Aoreans Agree To a Meeting on Divided Families

SEOUL, Aug. 31 (NYT).—The South Korean Red Cross agreed today to hold preliminary talks with its North Korean counterpart on Sept. 20 at Panmunjom to arrange o full-fledged conference on the problem of families separated by the division of Korea. South Korean Foreign Minister

Klm Yong Shik, meanwhile, announced a three-stage program for the unification of Kores, under which trade, travel and cultural exchanges between the two Koreas would follow contacts between divided families. The settlement of political problems should be sought in the last stage,

The Red Cross consent to the preliminary meetings was in response to a proposal by the North Eorean Red Cross that was officially conveyed to Seoul yesterday. South Korea had proposed to hold the talks on Sept. 28, but North Korea requested that it be advanced to Sept. 20. The preliminary talks, to be attended by five delegates from each side, would decide the site, the time, the agenda and other procedural matters for a full conference.

The conference, the first since Korea was partitioned in 1945. was first proposed by the South Korean Red Cross on Aug. 12 to arrange mutual communications and reunions of an estimated ten million Koreans separated from their relatives by the political border for more than 20

Hopper Does It Again in East Moyie?

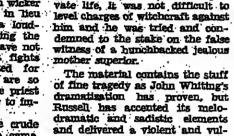

By Thomas Quan Curtiss VENICE ANG. S1 .(IHT) - Ever since "Essy Rider" struck gold and revised Hollywood thinking, movie people have often asked one another, What will Dennis

Hopper do next?"
His new film, "The Last Movie," has just had its world premiere at the Venice Festival and reactions as was the case when "Easy Rider" was first seen at the s Festival three years ago -bave been mixed. He has not repeated himself, but he has done it again.

"The Last Movie" is a moviewithin-a-movie, but Hopper lends this often treacherous device a lively originality and an ingratialing, contagious humor. A Californian company, filming another remake of "Billy the Kid" in Peru, completes work and goes home, leaving behind a minor member of the crew who has fallen in love with land, the people and a native prostitute.

He soon discovers that the location shooting has had an odd effect on the Indians who have observed it. They set about playing at movie-making, with wicker replica and microphones in lieu of equipment and with a loudouthed chieftain replacing the departed director. They have not understood that the fist fights and gunfire are simulated for movies; the proceedings are so dangerous that the village priest begs the lingering Yankee to im-

He obligingly curbs the crude realism and joins in the game, though he is fearful that he may become the human sacrifice of some revived Inca ritual. This and the leftover gringo's encounters with an American businesman and his family and with a moronic gold prospector and his on-again; off-again love affair with an Indian girl comprise the scenario, which Hopper realizes with a playful use of technique, free and fresh, keeping the screen amusingly and spontaneously alive. He is in doubt as to how to let go and in the final 20 minutes provides multiple endings, his intention here being to emphasize the alienation of the actor from his role. This is an interesting though over-lengthy experiment and the audience bethe Kansas stranger in Peru, con-tributing a performance of charming modesty. Thomas Millish is the local priest. The others, for their porposes, soffice, Hop-per's second film, like his first, is the work of an exploring, imaginative artist, a motion picture of striking-personality and fetching conceits.

car spectacle as full of torture as Torquemada's grandmother. Living skeletons are broken on the wheel, the thumbscrew and boot are liberally and vigorously applied, and in one long-lasting tableau, a convent of nuns, most of them naked, are exorcised by the witch-hunters. ... The production is as lavish as it is loud, an attempt at something in the florid manner of "Setyricon," but instead of firstrate Fellini, the result is fifth-rate Peter Brook. Oliver Reed both as the snave churchman of. the beginning and as the martyr -who is graphically burned to ashes in a particularly repulsive climax—scores strongly, but Vanessa Redgrave as his deformed comes restive. He himself enacts enemy seems to be emulating Lon Chancy in his more expressive moments.

The high literary tone of Whiting's play is preserved only in the scenes between the priest and his axistress. London appears to be almost exclusively populated by cocketey weters and even Richellen-his very name receives various prominciations—has the

Ken Russell's "The Devils" is a common touch. The dialogue is jolting with such non-17th-cenbold and broad screen version of Aldous Huxley's book about a tury and non-French colloquial-17th-century priest who tried in isms as "Bye, bye, blackbird" and vain to protect his tolerant city "Where did you pick her up?" of Loudun from the grips of Ribeing tossed about when the chelleu's bigotry. The mania for improvement runs rampant these days and now Henry James has been rewritten for the screen. Michael Winner's "The Nightcomers" another English entry here, relates the events leading up to the beginning of The Turn of the Screw.

The valet and the dead governess of the original have been resurrected to re-enact the corruption they have worked on the two children at a stately country mansion. Sex, cruelty and smouldering violence predominate this free transposition the novelette's characters. Michael Hastings has composed thriller out of the suggested elements of the James story and it is excellently performed and intelligently directed.

It is certainly not likely that the fastidious James would have put on paper such a scene as that in which a brutal servant ties up a ladylike nanny the while the adolescent heir to the house peeks through a keyhole at their amorous play. This is the domain of Zola and Octave Mirbeau, with the shocks of the permissive cinema replacing the easured pussy-footing of James.

Marion Brando, who has acmired an Irish brogue for this assignment, succeeds in conveying the toner evil that lurks in the sinister footman demoted to gardener, and Stephanie Beacham as his crushed-flower victim is convincing, though her role is .

reminiscent of the imperiled heroine of Victorian melodrams. Outstanding are Verna Harvey and Christopher Ellis as the children who under the veneer of well-bred manners coldly set their death traps. What we have is not Henry James, but a hand-ful of his characters who have been transplanted into a post-Freudian psychological shocker.

"M Comme Mathieu" is the first film of a young French cineaste, Jean-François Adam. Like most povice directors Adam takes discernible models. He has evidently been much impressed with the Gallic avant-garde of a few years ago. He follows in the footsteps of the early Truffant and Chabrol in recounting the history of a disturbed married couple. The pace is so deliberately slow at the start that nothing of account happens during the first half hour. Thereafter we are plunged into a drama about a man who is inconsolable because he has reached 30. Nothing, it seems, can be done about this and so he shoots his

The psychological complication and soul-searching of the pro-tagonist are the pivot of the scenario, but as they have not been dramatized sufficiently one is at a loss as to why he does what he does. Adam directed the cast far better than he wrote the streenplay; it would seem his talent is for direction rather than dramatic composition, though as an "author" he has insisted on doing both, Samy Frey is the mooning husband, Brigitte Fossey, a promising young actress, his wife, and Bulle Ogier, a passing fancy of the madman. It might be suggested that Attam; when he makes his second try, secure a scenario of more substance.

Kurosawa's "Do-De-Ska Den" is a powerful drama about a collection of human wrecks living in a miserable sharitytown. Its dramatis personae include a neurotic bureaucrat dominated by his shrewish wife, an adolescent girl who has been raped by her uncle who tries to kill her lover: a delivery boy: a visionary tramp who builds dream houses in his imagination while his child dies of starvation; a betrayed husband who tries to console his shame in his love of his children; a due of drunks who swap wives; and an idiot youth who fancies himself a streetcar con-

Kurosawa has lacquered the dismal background with some gorgeous color photography, but from his grim materials he has distilled a composite tragedy in which the destinies of his characters strain an imposing grandeur. His film is far too long and needlessly repetitious but it contains many remarkable interludes; its compassion and its ironic humor are akin to those of Gorki's "Lower Depths."

FONTAINERLEAU, France, Aug. 31 (IRT).—The last of a group of 135 students dispersed from here yesterday, taking with them two months' experience in one of the most durable and fruitful of French-American cultural exchanges.

They were the 50th-anniversary class of what is officially known as the Ecoles d'Art Americaines—a music conservatory and a school of fine arts with ses-gurated in the weighty presence of Camille Saint-Saëns, then 86 and in the last year of his life. Cultural exchange was not yet a phrase in vogue when Gen. John J. Pershing asked Walter Damrosch to do something about improving the artistic level of Army music. The result was the AEF Bandmasters and Musicians School at Chaumont, under the French musician and pedagogue Francis Casadesus, and an all-French faculty.

Influence

Casadesus was struck by "the wonderful influence that Americans and French have over one another," and thought that "such natural, pure and agreeable rela-tions" should continue in the form of a summer school at which American students could benefit from the tuition of professors of the Paris Conservatory. With the cooperation of the French government, the prefecture of Seine-et-Marne and the town of Fontainebleau, the school was given the use of the Louis XV wing of the palace for its schoolhouse, and on the other side of the Atlantic, Damrosch was an enthusiastic collaborator. The target date was 1921, but by March of that year Damrosch felt planning had not gone fast enough and exharted Casadesus in his best evangelical style to wait for 1922, when there would be "several hundreds of eager young Americans ready to take dvantage of such a splendid opportunity." It opened in 1921 anyway, with for conducting, and-in the faculty's younger ranks a 34-year-old teacher of soliège and harmony, Nadia Boulanger, and an assistant named Robert Casadesus, the 22-year-old nephew of Francis. There were also 85 eager young Americans, some of whom had got there with the help of a 25 percent student fare cut by the French Line. One of them was a 20-year-old Brooklyn boy named Aaron Copland.

Early in July, at the beginning of this anniversary session, Copland was among a number of artists to give recitals to benefit the school's scholarship fund. He also talked to the students about music and composition, about the centuries of culture represented in France, and about the "importance that we in America create a musical culture that we can be proud of."

But before all he spoke of his decisive encounter with Nadia Boulanger, of whom he remembered not so much what he learned about notes or la grande ligne, but "an attitude toward the whole art of music. I have never met anyone to whom music as an art meant so much."

Copland stayed on to study with Mile. Boulanger for three years in Paris and left "with an unforgettable memory of music as I had seen it through her eyes and understanding."

Since then, countless other path to Mile. Boulanger, either in Fontainebleau or at her apart-ment near Place Clichy in Paris. The composers at Fontaineblean this year speak in much the same way as Copland. Hugh Robertson, 31, who lives in Paris and has come back here for several summers, talks about "her way of understanding a score, of seeing what you are trying to do and giving advice-sometimes just a few words—that helps you do What you are trying to do." David B. Kozinski of Wilmington, Del., talks of her as "a presence" who has "such an awe of the art of music that you come away worshiping music even more than Mademoiselle as she is referred to by the Fontainebleau students (who range in age over three generations), has been at the music school continuously since the beginning and is now director. At 84, although slight and with severely impaired vision, she radiates strength, a benevolent severity, a polite directness. She has made some changes.

The school still admits mainly Americans, but this year there also were among the 100-odd students some from Brazil, Colombia, Bulgaria, Singapore, Japan and elsewhere. "I think it is a good idea for them to meet people from other places, with dif-ferent ways of doing things," she

What has not changed is her heavy teaching schedule and her unfalling appearance at the student concerts in the palace's Jeu de Paume. The one on Friday that ended the 1971 session was an impressive display of the performing and composing talent on hand.

It was a demonstration of the line that stretches from Copland to, say, Yitkin Seow, a 16-yearold Singapore Chinese who played Beethoven's 32 Variations in C-minor on the piano, then returned with a viola to play parts of Bach's Suite in C (the Sarabande "as a very great artist," said Mile. Boulanger later). Or to Curtis Rayam, a tenor from the University of Miami, whose poise, stylistic elegance and French diction in songs by Fauré and Duparc were exemplary. Or to Stefan Kozinski, an 18-yearold composer-violinist-organist who gave an imposing recital on the rather intractable organ at Notre Dame in Paris on Sunday. Another sign of the continuity at Fontainebleau was the presence of Robert Casadesus at the Friday concert. In 1946, in difficult postwar conditions, he rounded up 17 young planists to resume the summer courses here that his uncle had helped to begin after the earlier war. He was here this year for master classes. and his son Jean also taught piano.

Francis Casadesus' words of the "natural, pure and agreeable relations" between Americans and French may seem to come from a more innocent age, but it is an atmosphere that has been recreated here every summer (with time out for war) for a half-may seem to be a one-man show but a great kitchen requires as much teamwork as a complicated assembly line.

La Tortinière, the elegant château - hotel - restaurant, just outside Tours, is a case in point. It is run by s hotelier, Joseph Olivereau, is also the new president of the Relais de Campagne group of expensive country inns, which has 80 members in France and associate members elsewhere. Mr. Olivereau will changes in the membership-if necessary-to keep up quality, which he sees as the key to success for the Relais de Campagne. However, he also hopes to expand the group. He has two ideas for reaching his goals. His first project is under way. It is called Operation Sincérité and requires all members to guarantee that only natural products are served in their establishments: no frozen foods, no canned goods except those prepared by the establishment itself, no butter substitutes. Fruits, vegetables and fish are to be served only in season.

Enforcers .French government inspectors will enforce the rules; violators can be prosecuted for fraud. Mr. Oliverean's second project

La Tortinière is a good example of what a Relais de Campagne establishment should be. housed in a chateau built in 1861, tastefully and elegantly fitted out and has fine cooking and wines. There is heavy emphasis on local products, cuisine and wines.

Out-of-the-ordinary dishes are explained on the menu. Homemade pates, rillons and rillettes are Touraine specialties, as is matelote d'anguille au Bour queil, a fine eel stew with local red wine. Salmon is another Loire valley fish and especially well prepared here in e sauce Duglère, made tomatoes, cucumber, parsley and chervil. Another popular dish is tournedos tourangelle, a steak with a cognac and truffle sauce to which prunes stuffed with a mousse of fole gras are added.

The cheese platter is basically the excellent local goat cheeses and the desserts are outstanding. Two of the best are souffles with orange sections baked inside orange skins and pruneaux en chemise; prunes stuffed with almond paste, deep fried and served in a vanilla-flavored crème anglaise. The wine list includes superb and reasonably priced regional wines. The 1970 Sauvignon d'Oisly has such finesse and fruitiness that it could put many Sancerres out of business, and the 1970 Saint-Nicolas-de-Bourgueil is the most fruity, tender and delicate one I have tasted.

"The Marriage of a Young Stockbroker," directed by Lawrence Turnan, sters Richard Benjamin, Joanna Shimkos and Elizabeth Ashley. "I can well imagine a comedy about voyeurism.". admits . Roger Greenspun. "Most movie critics live one. But "The Marriage of a Young Stockbroker isn't really about voyeurism, any more than it is about stockbroking. It does have a bit to do with marriage, but mostly in terms of mechanics sexual mechanics, the mechanics of marital supremacy, the nuclear family as a machine for getting on in the suburbs. In this connection its only real subject is its own comic situations, and its real genre is the unsuccessful television pilot." "Deep End," made in England by the Polish director Jerzy Skolimowski, is at once furmier and more tragic more serious and more relaxed than Skolimowski's earlier films, according to Roger Greenspun. It is the work of a director who has come to feel at ease with his insights and his own way of developing them John Moulder Brown plays Mike, a 15 year-old who takes his first job as an attendant at a drab swimming pool in a run-down part of London. Jane Asher is the female attendant who teaches Mike the ropes and with whom he immediately falls in love. "The bath in Deep End' is not so much a place for getting clean as a place for indulging fantasies, generally sexual, and Skolimowski, who drops symbols the way detective writers drop clues, is not about to ignore any of the possibilities. Although it has a strong and good story. Deep End is put together out of individual usually comic routines. Many of these don't work but many more work well. For John Moulder-Brown and Jane Asher, I am lost in admiration." "Black Jesus." an Italian-made movie about a visionary African leader in prison, was characterized as "stark, studied and slow as a suail," by Howard Thompson. It is "a shadow play, hardly a movie at all." But the reviewer had praise for the star Woody Strode, who "does a perfectly respectable fob ... his gentle spirit of honviolence end agopized endurance under pres-sure are painfully real." But, he goes "the actual subject is a good deal broader and more diffuse and includes the major manmade disasters of the era-on the grounds that these lead people to revolt... There is some nnusual footage in Thermidor and much of it, for example with Mao Tae-tung in China in the thirties is well worth seeing." However, "Thermidor fails and fails especially to build an argu-

Indeed, the film is at pains to rewrite history as it tells how in the early spring of 1860 the Tokugawa First Minister H was am-

"Medicine Ball Caravan," directed by François Reichenbach. is "the filmed account of a freespirited bus trip made last summer by 150-odd beautiful people, counter-culturists, musicians, Hog Farmers, hangers-on," Roger Greenspun notes, "The ostensible reason for the caravan was give concerts. What you see of the concerts seems to have little enough to do with the caravan. For the most part they feature big name talents . . . and they are treated by Reichenbach, a French director, as isolated selfcontained events." The caravan set out from San Francisco with the intention of ending up at the Isle of Wight but it ended abruptly at Antioch College in Ohio in a confrontation with the young political left who spotted a staged documentary. "None of this is dreadful but much of it has been seen before," Greenspun says.

"Let's Scare Jessica to Death," directed by John Hancock, is generally a disappointment, says Roger Greenspun. In the film Jessica (Zohra Lampert), "just recovered from a nervous breakdown, with her husband and a friend renounces the New York rat race and takes possession of a clammy old house in Connecticut. On the very first night they encounter a wayfaring hippy who has gotten into the house before them and whom they ask to stay a while. She turns out to be a 100-year-old vampire . . ."

Music in Italy: Siena's New Music Week contributed to the great success of this intense

By William Weaver

SENA Italy (IHT) —Until a few years ago, the Settimana Musicale Senese, Siena's week-long music festival, virtually banned contemporary music. The Settimana's interest lay more in the direction of revivals and commemorations, celebrations of centenaries. In fact, the festivalwhich has just begun its 38th edition—can be considered the center from which, in prewar days. the great Vivaldi revival spread throughout the

More recently, however, the Settlmana, and the Accademia Chigiana, which sponsors it, have opened their doors to newer music. Courses at the Chigiana this summer have been taught by advanced composers like Franco Donatoni and Morton Feldman, and the festival's program is rich in new music, including some world premieres The first of these was heard at the opening concert, last Thursday night. The evening was devoted to works of Luigi Dallapiccola, who was present in the andience. First came his familiar series of "Greek Lyrics," composed between 1942 and 1945, for voice and instrumental ensemble. They were sensitively sung by soprano Slavka. Taskova (though the lower part of her voice was a little weak at times), and members of Florence's Maggio Musicale Orchestra were conducted with accuracy and intelligence by Zoltan Pesko. Pesko then conducted a work written only last year, never heard before in Italy: "Sicut Umbra," for cointralto and small ensemble. Carmen Gonzalez, the vocal soloist, interpreted with restrained passion the beautiful text of Juan Ramón Jimenez and piece, surely an important new work by one of Italy's leading and most versatile composers. The second half of the evening featured the chamber chorus of the Italian Radio conducted by Nino Antonellini. After a spirited, witty performance of Dallapiccola's settings of text by Michelangelo Buonarroti the Younger (1933), the chorus presented two new works. The first. "Tempus Destruendi," was a world premiere; its complementary piece, "Tempus Aedificandi," was written last year and first performed in Tel Aviv.

Both confirm Dallapiccola's peculiar gift for choral writing, here varied by the occasional—and dramatically effective—use of soprano solo against a pedal of voices, some singing in a kind of monotone, others whispering, with percussive effect.

From the lovely courtyard of the Palazzo Pubblico, scene of the Dallapiccola concert, the festival moved the following night inside the building to the Sala del Mappamondo. There, beneath the great Simone Martini, the Chigiano Sextet performed a stite Hans Worner Henze has derived from his score for the film "Der Junge Törless." It is a work of rare elegance, quite different from the more aggressive polemics of other recent works. Then another world premiere: three songs by the Florentine composer Ugalberto de Angelis for voice and six instruments on texts by Giorgio Vigolo (an Italian poet who is also a brilliant music critic). De Angelis is a Dallapiccola pupil and possesses his master's feeling for words; the settings are deftly devised and were tastefully sung by Miss Taskova, for whose voice they might

Politics in Saigon

The recent legislative elections in Sonth Vietnam produced a heavy turnout of voters (despite enemy terrorist attempts), an increased number of opponents to the Thieu administration, but an apparently safe majority for the president. Beyond that. the number of independent candidates and a bewildering array of parties, cliques and personalitiee make interpretation of tha results difficult at this time.

Under the circumstances, it was a creditable showing for a nation inexperienced in this kind of politics and racked by war and civil discension. The South Vietnamese people, in fact, displayed a higher degree of civic responsibility than their leaders in, or in quest of, presidential office. The difficulty will be to make the responsibility effective in the national legislature.

There is another difficulty as well. Civil wars have been fought by collective leaderships in the form of legislative bodies, committees and the like. The Americans did so in their own revolution; the French-at times—in theirs. But South Vietnam also has a strong executive, and it will not be easy for the lagislature, even if so inclined. to assert itself at the president's expense.

Moreover, South Vietnam is in the throes ol a major transition, as the American troops withdraw, and ever greater responsibility for the conduct of the war (with all that implies for the conduct of domestic matters) falls on Saigon. Is there any element within the legislature that shows signs of becoming a real popular force, either in support of the president, or against him?

The political Buddhists—the An Quang -would seem to be the most obvious candidates for such a role. They are strong in the north, where once they showed signs of being able to topple the Saigon government. Part of their strength derives from the uneasiness of the Buddhlst majority of Vietnam over the influence of Catholics (many of them from what is now North Vietnam) in Saigon during the earlier phases of the war; how much of this feeling remains is not easy to determine. And part derives from their advocacy of a political settlement.

But the An Quang, though vigorous, vocal and well organized in some areas, do not have a decisive voice in the lower house. The big question is whether they will be a center for the opposition, one that can create a genuine focus for some "third force" within South Vietnam, or whether the opposition will remain divided and powerless even to command the attention of a respectable proportion of the population. All that can he eaid is that the elections were honest enough, and real enough, to give such an opposition a chance.

Soviet Common Market

Moscow has been gleeful in recent weeks over the disruption of Western international cooperation in monetary exchange. The voices in West Europe and Japan expressing resentment at President Nixon's unilataral decision to float the dollar obviously delight Kremlin leaders, always eager to cheer along divisive struggle among the Western allies.

In the Soviet Union's own realm, however, Moscow constantly preaches increased economic cooperation between itself and its satellites. Two years of negotiation to further this goal culminated in the recent issuance by the Council for Mntual Economic Assistance of what amounts to a grand design for establishing a Soviet-bloc common market. So many failures and internal splits have marked Comecon's existence that the emergence of this master design is in itself of considerable significance.

No doubt the new Comecon integration plans are less sweeping than Moscow would have liked, and the document just published goes to great lengths to emphasize each Comecon member's right to decide for itself the degree and nature of its participation. But concessions of this kind to Romania of the Comecon countries will cooperate in by this new design. implementing many of the specific ideas in the new pattern. The document lists many proposed activities, including even joint research on means of minimizing air pollution from automobiles.

However, the main new features are probably these; agreement on priority for narrowing and eventually ending the gap in industrialization between the various members of Comecon; creation of what amounts to socialist international corporations that can conduct production, sales, research, etc., in several different countries simultaneously on the model of, say, IBM; initiation of joint planning for key industries and joint forecasts of major technical and economic trends, and an outline of concrete steps aimed at making Comecon's "transferable ruble" a genuine international currency rather than a paper unit of account, as it

It will be no easy task to implement these and other features of the new Comecon blueprint. There are many clashes of economic interest in that organization; the smaller members tend to fear exploitation by the Soviet Union, as well they may. But it would be unwise to discount the likelihood of a substantial increase in Comecon do not negate the probability that the bulk — integration during the 15 to 20 years covered our own, the kidnapping and murder of 14-year-old Bobby Franks in Chicago nearly 50 years ago gripped the nation in a sense of shock and horror. That dreadful crime occurred, of course, before the minds of Americaos had been sated with accounts of the slaughter of wbole families—the Herbert Clutters, for example, whose death in a farmhouse in rural Kansas was chronicled so graphically by Truman Capote; the Walpurgis Night in Sharon Tate's California home a couple of years ago; the demoniac shooting of the Yablonskis. Yet the Bobby Franks case was, in all truth, horrible enough-and made more so by its sheer wantonness, by the fact that the culprits in it were two young men of wealthy and socially prominent Chicago familles who did what they did for excitement, for a thrill.

For his part in this murder, Nathan Leopold, 19 years old at the time, was sentenced to life plus 99 years in prison and actually served 33 years in an Illinois penitentiary before being granted parole in 1957. His prison years were used for study, for reflection and, in no small measure, for service to his fellow men: during the second

In an age somewhat more innocent than world war he volunteered to serve as a guinea pig for clinical tests of new drugs for malaria, was infected with the disease and was cured by one of the experimental drugs . After prison, he went to Puerto Rico. where he served as a laboratory technician in a mission hospital and taught mathematics at night. In 1961 he married. Near the conclusion of his life, Nathan

Leopold was able to observe: "I would say that, on the whole, I have had a good lifeeven many parts of the prison years." It is even possible to say that, despite his atroclous crime, he had a life of much usefulness. a life that touched the lives of others beneficently—not just malignantly. Perhaps his crime was an aberration, the product of peculiar influences and pressures that beset him in his youth and that were eurely not wholly of his own making. Perhaps reflection and remorse and the regimen of prison life regenerated him. One can but speculate about the shaping of this life as of any other. The inference seems inescapable, however, that allowing him to live was more serviceable to society than putting him to death. Perhaps his greatest usefulness lay in the teaching of this lesson.

International Opinion

The Dollar and Beyond

It is probable that the United States has the means, if it wishes, to crush the economy of all its allies without worrying about the immediate repercussions on its own foreign trade-since this represents only 4 percent of its Gross National Product. But quite apart from the questions that would be raised in such a context about the validity of political and military alliances, euch an egocentric American economic strategy nonethelees would threaten the United States' own economy. It is inconcelvable that a world recession will halt on the Atlantic and Pacific ehores of the United States.

The dispute is three-sided in that the police draw fire from both the contending parties when they appear.

New Africa: The Tribal Lines Persist

By Jim Hoagland

NAIROBI.—The announcement by Zambian politician Simon Kapwepwe that he would form his own party to challenge his longtime ally, President Kenneth Kaunda, was a dropping of the other shoe, But the echoes of the long-expected action were heard all across southern Africa.

The formal break by Mr. Kap-Webwe, who was once Mr. Kaunda's vice-president, spotlights dangerous tribal rivalries that simmer just beneath the surface in Zambla and many other African countries.

It could also affect the complex racial politics of southern Africa, of which Zambia is a keystone. Mr. Kaunda had recently appeared to many observers to be backing down from his previously milltant calls for a confrontation with his white minority-ruled neigh-

Now, faced with the most serlous political challenge of his career, President Kaunda may have to re-escalate the war of words with Portuguese Angola, Mozambique, Phodesia and South Africa if Mr. Kapwepwe seeks to use it as an issue.

Economically Important

Zambia is one of Africa's most economically important countries. It is the world's third largest producer of copper, behind the United States and the Soviet Messrs. Kapwepwe and Kaunda were the two most powerful leaders in the country (known as Northern Rhodesia when it was a British colony; when it came to independence in 1964. But they have been estranged for more than two years. Mr. Kapwepwe aunounced last week in Lusaka that he would create the United Progressive party to oppose Mr. Kaunda, after resigning from the minor cabinet post Mr. Kaunda had relegated him to last October.

Reports reaching this east Afri-can capital suggest that the immediate cause for Mr. Kapwepwe's break had been the rejection of his demand for Mr. Kaunda to clear the cabinet of "deadwood" and bring in younger, better trained men to replace officials who had been given high posts as rewards for their role in the independence struggle.

Thet Mr. Kapwepwe's resignation has not plunged the country into a political crisis is something of a success for Mr. Kaunda's ap-parent decision to play less of a role in international politics and concentrate on establishing a stronger base domestically.

Elected chairman of the Organization of African Unity last year, Mr. Kaunda toured Western capitals pressing for diplomatic support in the African rampaign against South Africa. He was also chairman of the nonallgned summit conference, which Zambia hosted last September, and associates of Mr. Kaunda hinted that he was considering a campaign to succeed U Thant as secretary-general of the United Zambia's relations with its southern neighbors tend to be cyclical in any event. When the Zambian financial position is strong, Mr. Kaunda can afford to take a harder line. When it weakens, as at present, Mr. Kaunda tends to take a quieter approach to the white-ruled countries which are Zambia's main economic partners.

A few weeks ago, for example, Zambia announced it would import 75.000 tons of coru from Rhodesia, with which it has been trying to sever trade links Zamhia's farmers have had their third successive disastrous year in growing that staple crop.

This trade agreement came during the same week that Mr. Kaunda closed the University of Zambla and deported two expatriate professors who had supported student demonstrations against the French Embassy in Lusaka after the French announced a major arms deal with South

Mr. Kaunda, who a year ago thought he had obtained France's agreement to curtall arms sales to South Africa, banned demonstrations against the French and made mild criticisms of the new weapons deal.

In neighboring Malawi, which warm relations with the white minority governments, diplomats say that Zambian contacts have increased in the past few months.

Although he bas a reputation as a severe critic of white rule. Mr. Kapwepwe has not directly attacked Mr. Kaumda's ehift on foreign policy. He has not, in fact, spelled out his own policles since he formally broke with Mr. Kaunda, as the president pointed out in a stinging verbal attack on Mr. Kapwepwe last Friday. TSTANBUL .- When things go wrong in Turkey the army intervenes. Even 150 years ago, if the fanatical Janizary corps up-set its regimental cauldrons, this betokened a change of administration.

Twice during recent years the armed forces have stepped in to tidy up the government. In 1960, when there was grave discontent with corruption, a military junta seized newer, rewrote the constitution, tried and convicted political leaders and actually executed three, including the prime and foreign ministers.

This spring the military again fe't called upon to move because of the menace to law and order from kidnapping gangs and the incipient urban guerrillas, However, the army, having learned from its own past mistakes and from the bad image of an officers' junta in neighboring Greece, produced a kind of demi coup d'état.

Early in March, $5 senior commanders met secretly to plan action. On March 12 a memorandum signed by the chief of the general staff and beads of the three services was sent to the president, himself a retired general. This warned that if "a strong and respected government... to stop anarchy" were not immediately formed the armed forces would "seize power directly.

Prompt Response

Parliament responded promptly with an ultimatum, accepting a largely non-party regime and allowing Nihat Erim, the new premier, to invoke martial law. Thi., still applies. But, unlike Greece, the administration remains truly civilian and parliameut itself stays in session. The army contents itself with ominous background warnings and patrols the streets to prevent incidents. The small but organized leftwing underground, largely drawn from university professors and students, has become invisible although obviously still there. Various persons have been charged with encouraging secession among Turkey's minority of 3.5 million Kurds, And the constitution is now being drastically amended to increase the government's executive powers before terminating martial law.

On the wbole it would appear that the great majority of Turks accept this solution. There was widespread fear that anorchy and massive disaster were looming. The generals are respected as patriots and this time they seem in full control of the armed forces, unlike the 1960 coup. which was mounted by colonels and majors.

'Done My Best'

Erim, an intellectual law professor, says: "I have done my best to end the atmosphere of crisis. When I took over I saw that the vase had been broken into fragments. I had to put it together again. To do this I was obliged first to restore order and will now reform the constitution hy a series of amendments to which the principal parties have already agreed. U.S. Politics: The Big Spenders

By Tom Wicker

WASHINGTON.—The law now provides that no one may contribute more than $5,000 in any one year to a candidate for federal office, and that no politi-cal committee shall collect or spend more than $3 million in any one year. But everyone who engages in, writes about or has anything else to do with politics knows that these statutes are violated as often as the Ten Commandments, and far more systematically.

Yet there never has been a prosecution, much less a couviction. The reason is not really that the national political parties cleverly get around the limitations by setting up moltifarious committees, supposedly independent, which then receive and expend $3 million each, and to each of which any fat cat may throw $5,000 with impunity. These are transparent subterfuges. The real reason no one has ever been prosecuted or jailed for violating the campaign-spending statutes is that, particularly in the age of television, these restrictions are simply not practical; therefore all political partles have a common necessity to violate them. As a result, no attorney general has prosecuted or will prosecute, because be would either be bitlug the hand that fed the President who appointed him, or hitting an opposing party that somer or later would be in position to hit back. This is not exactly a conspiracy; It is just a common understanding to do nothing, arising from common interest.

general public, or any individual voter, has three remedies for the wrong that may be done by this system of living above the law. The first remedy is for the attorney general to prosecute: but none ever has. The second remedy is for an aggricved individual or organization to collect the evidence of law-breaking and force a prosecution; on the face of it, that is not easy, and it is some what above and beyond the call of even the good citizen's duty.

The third remedy is to seek new and hetter legislation from Congress, which citizens in one form or another-from private personages to hig organizations-have becu doing for years with notable lack of success. A bill restricting television spending did get through Congress last year, only to be vetoed by President Nixon; and a broader-gauged bill has passed the Senate this year, but only to dubious prospects in the House and to the ultimate possibility of another veto. That is why it is important that Federal Judge Barrington D. Parker refused bera last week to dismiss a suit by Common Cause, the big citizens' lobby, against the major political parties. The suit seeks declaratory and injunctive relief from what it contends are persistent circumventions of the present campaign-fund statutes by both Republicans and Democrats, as well as the Conservative party of New York State.

The immediate meaning of Judge Parker's ruling is that at-torneys for Common Cause can now proceed to what lawyers call

"discovery" of the financial records of the major parties. The principal fund-raisers can be brought into court as sworn witnesses and made to testify about their records and procedures, an extraordinary opportunity for public disclosure of who has been financing politics in America. through what means, and to what extent.

One Way Out

Unless the major parties are able to fend off this dread prospect with legal maneuvers, which appears unlikely, the only way to avoid such disclosure appears to be the passage of the legislation now pending in the House. It would abolish present unrealistic limitations on contributions and expenditures in favor of a system of spending on a centsper-vote basis, remove the limitations on individual contributions, system "a real joit."

and impose improved reporting procedures of both contributions and expenditures. The alternative to passage is the almost certain exposure m federal court of Republican, Depocratic and Conservative financial records. At least, that's the way Common Cause and its attorners see the situation, and that is in large part the reason the sur was brought-to put on the presure for reform.

Some attorneys wonder i Parker's ruling might not open the door to frivolous or malicious suits to expose the financial rec ords of various organizations of individuals. To others, the sul provides one more example of the lengths to which it is often necessary to go to get redress and reform in America. As John Gardner of Common Cause once observed, you have to give the

U.S. Tax Credit Worries Its Allies

By Tad Szulc WASHINGTON, Aug. 31 (NYT). -The world's industrialized countries fear that President Nixon's plans to grant a tax credit to businesses that buy U.S.-made machinery and equipment may hurt them more than the new import surcharge imposed this month by the administration, U.S. officials said today. They said that these fears were conveyed by Western European and Japanese officials to Nathaniel Samuels, Deputy Under Secretary of State for Economic Affairs, during last week's session of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) in Geneva. The industrialized countries were reported to feel that the tax credit, combined with the additional import duties, was "really a drastic measure in terms of their ability to sell capital goods' on the U.S. market.

The tax credit and the import surcharge are key parts of the administration's new policies designed to stabilize the economy and safeguard the dollar.

Legislative Criticism The outery by foreign industrialized countries against the tax credit came against the backround of uncertain future for this legislation in Congress. Many Democrats and some Republicans have taken the view that Mr. Nixon's tax package tends to favor business at the expense of the consumer.

The administration has given no public indication of how long the surcharge would apply. Officials here reported that Mr. Samnels made it clear that the United States is unable to specify at this time its duration or the specific conditions required to lift

GATT criticism in the public sessions, as expected, centered on the surcharge, But Mr. Samuels was said to have found in his private meetings that "there was as much if not more concern about the effects of the investment tax credit" on the industrialized countries as there was about the surcharge.

These objections were directed at Mr. Nixon's request to Congress for a tax credit for invest-ment in new machinery and equipment—to be known as the Job Development Act of 1971—at a 10 percent rate this year and a 5 percent rate after Aug. 15, The credit, as proposed, would not be applicable to foreign-made machinery and equipment. A 20% Disadvantage

If enacted, it would have the same effect as reducing by 10 percent the price of U.S.-made machinery bought by a U.S. company. The import surcharge also adds up to 10 percent to the price of foreign-made products. The combined effect, therefore, would be to increase the price of foreign-made equipment, compared to American-made, by 20 per-

U.S. officials also said that Mr. Samuels had sought to impress on GATT and the foreign governments that the surcharge would be removed only after new international agreements had been negotiated to govern the exchange rates of major foreign currencles in relation to the dollar.

They said that the preliminary negotiations toward the creation

NEW YORK, Aug. 31 (NYT),-Senior executives of the American steel industry will be in Washington tomorrow to study a new proposal by Japanese steel companies that would limit their shipments to this country for three years, beginning Jan 1, 1972.

According to several U.S. steel officials, the proposal—presented yesterday to the State Department by a Japanese delegation—could not immediately be considered even a tentative agreement. The U.S. executives pointed out that the proposal was a revised program, drafted after the State Department had rejected an earlier Japanese quota pack-

North had a responding problem. The partnership had agreed to use transfer hids, but had not discussed the procedure with a good hand containing one minor. A three-club bid, either immediately or preceded by Stayman, was open to misinterpreta-

Bearing these considerations in mind, North decided to assume that his partner held some club support. Looking at his good controls, he jumped directly to six clubs, a hid compounded equally of optimism and intuition. He was right, because six clubs was a sound contract needing only a spade finesse to succeed.

South was oot unnaturally startled by this response. How could North want to play six clubs when he himself held a six-card sult headed by four honors? After a short period for thought, ouring which North con-cealed his feelings admirably, South found a plausible explana-

REFORE shouting praises, let me admit a possible taint in my enthusiasm for Edmund Wilson's "Upstate." I approached the hook with misgivings, for it appears at a skim to be nothing but 20 years' worth of diary entries about an ancient summer home and the flora, fauna and local history surrounding it, and I happen to lack both the instincts of an antiquarian and the interests of a naturalist. Moreover, there seemed reason to fear that at any moment one would be embarrassed by the crotchets and dotting of old age, or made to feel pity for the plight of a fragile gentleman succumbing to time and change. As quickly becomes evident from a careful reading, however, these are not disjointed jottings thrown to-gether in old age; Mr. Wilson is up to something more, and up to it in full control. So behind my joy and delight in the book may lie an element of relief that he has pulled it off despite the apparent risks involved.

now indulge my enthusiasm. What Edmund Wilsoo has written here is a drama in diary form. The situation is this: It is 1951, The mother of a middle-aged man of letters has just died and be-queathed him the nearly 200year-old family homestead. The man loves the home; it lies in a part of the world that he finds enchanting: he has happy memories of time speot there in his youth and a profound attachment to the ancestors who huilt it and lived in it. But there are risks involved in occupying it. The house is deteriorating; weeds choke its garden beds, the paper is peeling from its musty walls, ghosts haunt its chambers.

But having admitted that, I'll

Will it be possible for the man to restore the house and live in it? The question is not as banal as it appears, for in Mr. Wilson's delicate treatment it assumes symbolic significance: Will it he possible for the man to reconcile the past with the present, to know the past without losing touch with the present, to live in the present with-out dishooring what came be-fore? And what the plot of the drama unfolds is a subtle form of adventure, a risky attempt to prove that Thomas Wolfe was wrong, that indeed one must go home again.

Of course, the man in questioo is Edmund Wilson himself, learned, inquisitive, full of salty opinions, amusing anecdotes and a surprising willingness to reveal his private self. The house is his family seat in Talcottville, N.Y., a tiny dot of a town in Lewis County, which lies north of Utica, east of Lake Ootario and south of the St. Lawrence THOUSEDO both the house and its surroundings have a rich and special history. The acts and scenes of Mr. York Times book reviewer.

Wilson's drama are composed diary entries made each summ from 1950 to 1970; and the cootain a bewildering variety diverting miscellany: of Mr. Wilson's huge circle friends; opinions on everythin from books to politics, from an tique furnishings to pornograph ic movies; explorations into local and family history; community gossip; scraps of ver-(some of them written under the influence of whisky, Mr. Wil. son admits), and lengthy descriptions of the natural countryside

So it might easily be argued that "Upstate" is a bouillabelies to be sampled at random. With a hite of local history here (Mr. Wilson's investigation of how Sodom, N.Y., got its name, for instance), a chew of character sketch there (like his revealing vignette of Vladimir Nabokov And it could he argued further more that it is a rich enough stew as such, and needs no profounder definition.

But I don't think so. I happen to find family genealogies a hore: the history of early American religioo usually puts ma to sleep; and I know so little about flowers that I can't tell one from another even when they're described. Yet I was drawn through "Upstate" he an iroo filing through a magnetic field, and what drew me wasthat drama of the man fighting with the weapons of knowledge and experience to collapse time past into time present and vice

For a while, he seems to be winning. He restores the house and hegins to feel that it is his He gets to know the members of the local community and traces their ancestry. But the note is neither sour nor pitiful. It is more like that unspeakably beautiful ending of Chekhov's "The Cherry Orchard," when the sound is heard of a "string snapping" and old Firs. the remnant of a past way of life. peacefully dies. It is a haunting book that will be read hundreds of years from oow to learn what the 20th century was about.

'Little Miss Cool' Evert Is a Clay Bird

By Mark Asher

WASHINGTON, Aug. 31 (WP).—Chris Evert, the 16-year-old heroine of the recent Wightman Cup tennis matches, is scheduled to receive an award at Forest Hills, N.Y., during the U.S. Open. Her parents already have made arrangements for Frank Froehling, a fellow Fort Lauderdale, Fla., resident, to accept for her.

"We're not trying to be doomsdayers but we're just trying to be realistic," Mrs. James Evert was quoted as saying. "It's a good chance she won't do very well on grass and: if that's the case, we want to get her back in school as soon as possible."

Miss Evert's forte is slow-court tennis and she has proved her mastery of the necessary ground strokes. In addition to ber two singles victories against Great Britain in the Wightman Cup, the teen-ager holds victories on clay over most of the world's top women

'Couple of Bounds'

Asked about her parents' plans for her award, Miss Evert said: "They just like to say that, so if I'm out of the tournament early they won't be disappointed. And if I do well they will be surprised. I hope to get through a couple of rounds at Forest Hills. That'll still be good for me."

Miss Evert plays Edda Buding of West Germany in the first round. If form follows, her opponents in future rounds would be, in order, Mary Ann Elsel, Françoise Durr, Wightman Cup victim Virginia Wade, Billie Jean King and Rosemary Casals.

Tennis on fast surfaces is not as easy for Miss Evert, because the daughter of tennis pro Jim Evert still lacks the power necessary for the serve-and-volley style of grass-court

A Comparison

Although she has never seen Evonne Goolagong of Australia, the 19-year-old Wimbledon champion, Miss Evert's comparison of their games serves as a good example of why Miss Evert is so successful on clay and Miss Goolagong so successful on grass. "From what I've beard." Miss Evert noted. "she is a good mover, a good athlete. It

Miss Evert won the 16 and 14 titles in the past. She started playing tennis when she was 6, and the early start is one reason why she still uses a two-handed backhand. She was too weak for a one-handed backhand.

She wants to avoid reaching her peak too early, as happened to Peaches Bartkowicz, one of the best-known U.S. junior stars in a decade. She wants to reach her peak in her early or middle 20s so she can play professional tennis into her late 20s. Miss Evert showed her maturity—she is known as "Little Miss Cool"—at Cleveland when she was named the most valuable player in the Wightman Cup. The press selects the recipient. When Miss Evert accepted the award, she said nothing and started to walk away. The gallery chanted, "Speech, speech." So she turned around, came back, said, "Thank you, press," and walked away again.

"I didn't have any idea (that she would get the award) until the last minute," Miss Evert said. "What was I going to say? I just said the first thing that came into my mind. The people started laughing. What was I going to say?"

Baker about the economy. It woud be interesting to call up the man who declared "cellar door" the prettiest word in the English language and ask him which word is the dullest.

The bet here is that he would "economica," although since he is the sort who will let two wordsify as one, he might not. He might insist, with some justice, that "a fruitful exchange of views" is an even duller word than "economics."

There is nothing the least bit dull in the reality that is wrapalthough-let's he candid-those people who twinkle and cheer at no unexpected rise in gross national product or a hurp in the balance-of-payments curve have alwaya seemed to he forcing their enthusiasm just a hit.

All this is by way of apology for mentioning "economics" in this space today. Yet something must be sald-or asked-about

And yel these moments of hearty public applause for dynamle presidential actions are always a little scary. ANNOUNCEMENTS

By Russell Baker NEW YORK.—Does anyone out the Democrata leading, has handed the presidency a grant of power which seems likely to strengthen that office's tendency to become an autocracy. The jus-tification for these congressional conferrings of fresh statist powers on the President is invariably "national emergency" and it is foolish to quarrel with the President's experts about the existence of a "national emergency" simply hecause there are no bombs falling or stock markets collapsing. The natural tendency is to take refuge in one's own ignorance, laugh about the duliness of the subject, let the experts have their way and give the President even more power. This, in fact, is about what most of us did on the subject of Vietnam in the early 1960s.

Por the last several years we hare been told that Congress had learned its lesson about making these sweeping power grants to presidents. But it now turns out as many of us awoke to discover after the eveot, that Congress

Here was a President assuming owers of economic regulation by decree similar to the nowers exercised in the totalitarian states which we have heen resisting for 30 years and more, frequently with blood. The power to do so had been given him in advance by Congress, with the proviso that he must first find a state of national emergency to justify him-

Now, less than two weeks after the first decree, the President's men are gradually preparing us for the next announcement, which will state that it will be necessary to cootinue these extraordinary controls beyond the 90-day period which the President had first contemplated.

I suspect that it was through her former husband. Edward W. Titus, who collected them. This despite the account given by Patrick O'Higgins in "Madame," his biography of her. Titus is given bad notices by O'Riggins, but the latter did not swim into the Rubin-stein picture until after the Titus period and what Patrick O'Higgins says about him reflects only Helena Rubinstein's acid remarks after, in the book's words, she

I knew Titus fairly well in the late 1920s and early 1930s and I should think there might be some question about wbo dumped whom, But let it go. Edward W. Titus, repudiated or repudiator, played a considerable role in the period when Montparnasse seethed in a fever of international cultural activity. He seems now to have sunk into complete oblivion. Perhaps it is time that someone dropped a discreet tear for him. The duty devolves upon me. No one else will.

Titus was a difficult character. Nobody got along with him for very long. except me. I seem to have a built-in capacity for appealing to the irascible. My reward for this virtue, if it is a virtue. has been that I have spent a considerable proportion of my life with disagreeable people. In justice to Titus, let me report that he was never disagreeable to me. Perhaps that was because I never had any husiness dealings with him.

He played Maccenas to a good many young writers and artists of the time, but most of his periods of patronage ended In recriminations and rupture. He was a Maccenas along the lines of the original: as Maccenas helped support Horace and Virgil to enjoy by proxy a literary esteem which his own mediocre verses could never have gained for him, so Titus enjoyed vicarious authorship by publishing, or hanging the works of others. This per-mitted him also to indulge in first-hand authorship; hy publishing a magazine in which he prinled the works of others. he was in a position to write himself the editorial for each issue. It may be that some of them were even read.

Titus's magazine was called This Quarter, a somewhat weak-legged pun, which referred aimultaneously to the circumstance that it was a quarterly and to its location io the fererish quarter of Montparnasse. Its headquarters were established in a bookshop on the Rue Delambre -pretty much of a cultural Main Street

I seem to recall that Anais Nin at one time presided over Titus's shop, but I may be wrong about that: I do recall meeting her in it, however, some 45 years ago,

This Quarter was rather more profes sional in appearance than most of the other avant-garde publications which pullulated in Montparnasse at the time, hecause Titus had more money, though whether it was his own or Helena Rubinstein's I have no idea. Mr. Titus was one of the five Montparnasse dilettanle publishers who claimed to have first printed Ernest Hemingway. I shall make no attempt to arhitrate among them. It doesn't matter.

Truth to tell, This Quarter was inclined to be dull, something of an achievement in that milieu, even the number it devoted exclusively to surrealism, which at the time was anything you want, but never dull.

Titus's contributions to keeping hudding writers and artists in food and drink, mostly drink, were not over-appreciated by the recipients, and after all there was perhaps no particular reason for gratitude: Titus, after all, like many a modern Maecenas. lost no money on his largesse. It was not a bad operation to huy, say, a Picasso from a young struggling artist happy to get $20 for a painting, and then simply wait. (I choose Picasso as an example because, so far as I know, Titus never owned a Picasso.1 There is, of course, an advantage in having enough taste to buy the right struggling young artists, and this Titus had.

He was able to hang a brilliant selection of drawings and paintings in the home he hullt at Cugnes-sur-Mer after the fireworks of Montpernasse had guttered out, a hiding place, in a sense, for, wheo he disappeared from the Rue Delambre, nohody bothered to look for him. When he ceased to be Maccenss, he was simply there no fonger. He did not even leave an empty space.

If I still knew him in his days of darkness, it was perhaps, because while he was living just west of Nice at Cagnes-sur-Mer I was living just east of it, at Villefranche-sur-MPr. I used to go over to visit him once in a while, and the trip was, as the Michelin gulde would put it, worth the journey. He had bought four old houses just below the wall that bounds the high-perched terrace of the Place du Chateau of Cagnes, had taken them apart, and put them together again into onc.

In his garden was the old threshing floor of the village, ideal for dancing un-der the light of Japanese lanterns on a halmy night. The ironwork from the demolished buildings had been saved and fitted discreetly into the new one. So had the heavy hand-wrought beams. Two of them served as long benches on either side of the dining table, in a room with a halcony above, where some of the pletures removed from the Rue Delambre were hung. Titus had also acquired a young wife, a Swiss girl who participated in automobile rallies, as beautiful as his pictures and as hard as nails. I rememher vividly the last time I saw her, in 1951, I think.

I found myself, unexpectedly, passing through Cagnes, and I dropped in at Titus's without warning. The maid told me he was seriously ill and could see no one; but before I could leave, his wife. who had heard my name, hurrled to the door to intercept me. She explained that they had just arrived from Chicago, by private plane; she had been awake all night, helping the nurse hold Titus down. He was in delirium, and imagined he was being kidnapped by gangsters. After this ordeal, which had ended only two or three hours before I arrived, she was impec-culty dressed, not a hair out of place, as fresh as if she had had a good night's sleep, a courteous hostess who could not in any circumstances allow an old friend to be turned away by R servant. Her selfpossession was complete.

I received a note from Titus a week or two later; he was better, and would I drop in for lunch at Cagnes some day soon? And then another from his wife. He had just died.

I doubt if Edward W. Titus will occupy much space in the history of Montpernasse in its heyday. He left no lasting mark. even on the cosmetles industry; and he will probably never, like his former wife, provide the subject for a hiography. But while tribute, if it is tribute, is heme pald to Helena Rubinstein, I like to think that her onetime husband, who I suspect was responsible for many of her cultural acquaintanceships in Paris, is oot entirely forgotten. He was difficult, yes; irescible, yes: quarreisome, yes. But he was a man of taste. May he rest in peace.
